No tuition refund after 10 days

By Ben Chappert

Ever wonder what happens to your tuition fees if you quit after 10 days? At this level within the first 10 school days you will receive a 50 percent refund, but after 10 days you will receive a 10 percent refund. If you quit after 10 days, you will receive a 10 percent refund.

Tom Korman, policy analyst for the college board of the University of California and University of California, said all 20 community colleges in the state follow the same policy. "You have to be in the state for 10 days to be eligible for a refund," he said.

"Total refund for the 10 days was $1,000 in all cases. If you quit after 10 days, you will receive a 10 percent refund. If you quit after 10 days, you will receive a 10 percent refund."

There are no other conditions to the policy. The policy is designed to ensure that you are in the state for 10 days to be eligible for a refund.

Students who quit after 10 days will receive a 10 percent refund. If you quit after 10 days, you will receive a 10 percent refund.

After Korman, university president for the University of California, said that the policy is designed to ensure that you are in the state for 10 days to be eligible for a refund.

The last time the policy was changed was in 1985.
